The Face Gets a Face Lift -- Courtesy Michael Malin? On the last day of January, 2001, Malin Space Science Systems principal investigator Michael Malin made his latest contribution to the cause of disclosure by producing a new close up image of the Western half of the Face on Mars. Despite the fact that this is simply a higher resolution image of the same side that we have seen clearly since ...

Analysis of available orbital data shows that Soyuz-1 was over the horizon (or just beyond) in Berlin at the time when the Wilhelm Foerster Observatory picked up voice (See map above). This seems to indicate that it was mainly downlink that they heard because the reception times coincided well with the periods when the spacecraft was above or just below the horizon.

Since then, I've become curious about mission statements. Just as I discovered in SEO Tips: Having Fun with Title Tags and Meta Descriptions, I'm finding that great brands waste no opportunity to share what they believe in. They consistently communicate what they are about. These aren't bland organizations.
